Biographical Note
Miss Anne Forbes originated from Cambridge Massachusetts. After majoring in art from Bennington College in Vermont, Forbes pursued a Master’s degree in social anthropology from Harvard University's Radcliffe College. Taking an interest in Southwest Indian Art, Forbes applied for a fellowship through the Indian Arts Fund for the summer of 1948 to study painting and other techniques used in Pueblo art. Although the fellowship lasted only a summer, Forbes spent the following year visiting various pueblos meeting native artists and purchasing original art works from them. It was at this time that Forbes befriended artists Joe Herrera (Cochiti Pueblo), Velino Herrera (Zia Pueblo) and Jose Rey Toledo (Jemez Pueblo). Forbes also spent time visiting Pueblo schools examining the state of arts education for native children as well as acquiring paintings and drawings made by the Pueblo schoolchildren. In 1958, Forbes sent out a first draft of her “Survey of American Indian Arts and Crafts, Southwest and Northern Plains” which was the culmination of her research on the state of native art at the time with a particular focus on Pueblo artists. Following the release of her report, Forbes did not continue professionally in the world of art instead moving into human relations. Forbes held onto the bulk of her art collection, exhibiting pieces here and there, until donating a large portion of the collection to the National Museum of the American Indian in 2003. A longtime member of the Self-Realization Fellowship, Forbes also donated some of her pieces to that organization.

Scope and Content Note
The bulk of the Anne Forbes collection consists of documentation concerning her survey on American Indian arts and crafts in the Southwest and Northern Plains conducted in 1948-1949 and then revisited in 1958. This includes biographical notes on individual Native artists from New Mexico, Arizona, Montana, Colorado, South Dakota and California as well as notes on museum collections and art dealers whose collections and purchases included Indian art from the Southwest. Forbes also visited Pueblo schools during the 1948-1948 trip in order to examine the status of arts education and collected drawings from students as well as took careful notes on each school. Also included in the Forbes papers are the draft and final reports of Forbes' survey as well as responses to the report from prominent institutions and individuals in the Indian art world such as friend and artist Joe H. Herrera. Supporting materials to Forbes' research includes a collection of Smoke Signals newsletters from 1951 to 1965, which was published by the Indian Arts and Crafts Board, brochures and pamphlets from the Bureau of Indian Affairs concerning education and the arts, and exhibition documents and catalogs from museums featuring Native artists' works from the Southwest and Northern Plains.

The photo albums titled "Indian Paintings, Pottery, Pictographs, Prehistoric Murals, Dances, Artists" and "Pueblo Indian Paintings" hold photographs collected and taken by Forbes during her research. The bulk... of the photographs are of works of art and are arranged by culture group and artist. There are also a small amount of photographs of the artists themselves and their families.

Arrangement

The Anne Forbes collection is arranged into two series. Series 1: Indian Arts Research and Supporting Documentation is arranged alphabetically by folder. Series 2: Photo Albums contains two photo albums that have been left in their original orders.

Location note: The photographs and postcards were removed from the physical albums when they were assigned individual P numbers. Both the albums and the photographs are located in cold storage.

The two photo albums in this collection contain mostly copy prints and postcards which were gathered during Forbes's research on Indian art in the Southwest. The bulk of the prints are of works of art which are found at the Indian Arts Fund, the Laboratory of Anthropology in Santa Fe, New Mexico and the Peabody Museum at Harvard. Forbes had them organized by culture group and then by artist. The first album includes art by Hopi, Zuni, Navajo, Apache, Sioux, Kiowa, and Pawnee-Creek painters as well as photographs of Pueblo artists Tonita Pena, Joe H. Herrera, Jose Rey Toledo, Velino Herrera and Hopi artist Fred Kabotie. The album also includes photographs of San Ildefonso potters Maria and Julian Martinez. The second photo album consists of photos of paintings by Pueblo artists. The photographs include art from the following Pueblos; San Ildefonso, Santa Clara, San Juan, Tesuque, Cochiti, Jemez, Santo Domingo, Acoma, Zia, Picuris and Taos.
